Once you have code running in the background, you can experiment with the datasets using the app-data.ai site. I also attached an Azure Blob storage account to the Cloud Container and a Kaggle notebook to the Azure Databricks Cluster. App-data.ai (formerly AIA: Application Insights) is a data exploration tool that makes your application analytics and insights available. Its dashboard displays the results of your machine learning models in an intuitive UI. You can explore and run code for data exploration, a la Jupyter Notebooks on Azure Databricks, in Kaggle Notebooks. Check out the demo app-data.ai site and start using it. The App-data.ai SDK supports notebooks for data exploration, a la Jupyter Notebooks on Azure Databricks. Summary In this post, I've described how to setup an Azure Databricks Cluster with GPU support to run machine learning code in Jupyter Notebooks on Azure Databricks. You can create a cluster with a general purpose CPU or a GPU. You can download the source code for this article on GitHub. With her glossy hair, chocolate-brown eyes, and enchanting smile, Margot Robbie is best known for playing the sultry femme fatale in films such as "The Wolf of Wall Street," "Suicide Squad," and "I, Tonya." Now, as audiences have been doing since she was just a kid, the young actress is looking to take a more serious role — one that might even involve a superhero suit. "I wanted to take a step back and play someone in a role where it's a woman going through something that's unspoken," Robbie tells NBC News. The upcoming "Detroit" is a drama about the riots that broke out in Detroit during the Civil Rights era, which began to be recognized in American history as the most destructive wave of civil unrest in the United States. Directed by Kathryn Bigelow, the film stars Will Smith, John Boyega, Algee Smith, Anthony Mackie, Anthony Hemingway, Jason Mitchell, and Angela Bassett. Robbie plays the role of Deirdre, a biracial woman who experiences a head-spinning amount of racial violence during the 1963 Detroit uprising. There is very little information about her in 82157476af
